'Tis the merchants' hayin' season.

Yes, let Francisco Villa come up from Mexico and found a new party in the United States. Conditions are just ripe for a new venture.

If one may judge of the press dispatches, Ford and his party of peace advocates did not receive an over-cordial welcome in Norway after their even less pleasing reception by the British. It does not look like "out of the trenches by Christmas"—unless it's Christmas in 1918.

President Wilson and bride are shunning publicity; yet they have hired a whole section of a hotel at Hot Springs, are followed about by nine secret service men, are waited upon by a considerable retinue of servants, are tagged by a small army of journalistic photographers, are the center of interest to a rapidly increasing patronage at the aforementioned hotel and are being given columns of newspaper space every day. Verily, they will have a difficult time dodging publicity for the next two weeks.

PLOTING IN VERMONT?

Without wilfully blinding one's self to conditions that appear to exist, it would be entirely reasonable to doubt that anti-alleges plots have penetrated into Vermont to any considerable extent, as one might be led to infer by the alleged confession of Mentzer in New York City, where he is held for alleged complicity. Most assuredly there are only scattered cases of rabid support of the central powers' cause to be found in Vermont, and, by the way, little in the support of the other side which can be called unrestrained. Vermont people, as a rule, maintain a reasonable composure while at the same time they have their strong convictions as to the right and justice of the two causes at warfare. But those strong convictions do not, we believe, lead any of them to the point of forming plots which include the breaking of the laws of the state or of the nation, or even of participating in such nefarious plans as may be machinated by others. It is possible, however, that some of that stripe may have taken a temporary asylum in Vermont and thus have brought the city of Burlington into a certain measure of unpleasant notoriety. But it is more likely that the extent of Vermont's participation in any plotting may be traced to written reference to the existence of war order operations in Burlington as possible objects of displeasure on the part of the central powers' supporters who are gathered in some other section, presumably New York. That there may be agents, or an agent, of the anti-allies plotters in Burlington seems hardly probable.

Among the passengers on the American liner, Philadelphia, which sailed from New York for Liverpool, Eng., Saturday afternoon was James Williamson of Barre, who plans to spend the winter near his former home in Aberdeen.

Miss Annie Brown returned to her home in St. Johnsbury to-day, after a brief visit at the home of Martin Riley of East street, having been here yesterday to attend the burial of her cousin, Miss Eda Brown, whose remains were brought here from Worcester, Mass.

Miss Mary Tomasi, a student at Smith college, Northampton, Mass., is with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Sanguinetti, of North Main street for the holiday season. Her brother, Louis Tomasi, who is attending Worcester, (Mass.) Polytechnic institute, is also home for the Christmas vacation.

Residents of the Currier park neighborhood met together recently and decided to follow a worthy Christmas custom of illuminating their homes between the hours of 7 and 8 o'clock Friday evening, Christmas eve. Porches around the park will be lighted, too, and for an hour at least, the residences in that section will radiate Christmas cheer. The idea is worthy of emulation elsewhere in the city.

Among the visitors in the city yesterday and to-day were the following people: Dr. H. Nelson Jackson of Burlington, G. F. Hanson of Rochester, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Buel of Buffalo, N. Y., J. B.
